

The next chapter of pace and endurance: Agree 2027

Completely redesigned for 2027, the CUBE Agree is capable of extracting more speed from every rider, but it's also comfortable for the long haul. Pace and endurance. And yes, we know that's a glib claim. But it's one that the new Agree is more than able to live up to.

Consider this: the new Agree's C:62® carbon frame and fork's carefully sculpted tube profiles aren't just 150g (or 7.5%) lighter. They're also more efficient through the air. But that's only the start, because we also fitted an IC Aero Cockpit handlebar and a one piece, aero profile carbon seatpost. Together, it all adds up to a bike that's 10.4 watts faster whilst still being comfortable for long days in the saddle.

Of course, there's more to a great road bike than the frameset. That's why every model in the range, from the entry-level ONE to the range-topping SLT AXS and SLT Di2, has been carefully specced to maximise performance, even on long races and training rides. The complete bike weighs up to 700g less than before. But it's practical, too, with tyre clearance up to 36mm and a redesigned frame bag with more space for race essentials.

The Agree SLT is available in two versions. The AXS model features Sram's Red AXS 2x12 components and power meter, while the Di2 model substitutes Shimano Dura Ace Di2 2x12 with a 4iiii power meter: pick your poison. Both versions roll on Newmen Streem Allround wheels.

The SLX is built around a pair of Newmen Streem Climbing 35/38 wheels and a Sram Force AXS 2x12 setup with power meter, while the Shimano Ultegra Di2-equipped Race features Newmen Streem Allround 49/54s and has a 4iiii power meter. The Pro, meanwhile, keeps the Ultegra components and 4iiii power meter, but adds Newmen's Advanced A50 wheels.

The Agree EX pairs Sram Rival AXS 2x12 gears, brakes and power meter with a Newmen Advanced A50 wheelset, while the ONE features Newmen Advanced C.38 wheels with Shimano's 105 Di2 components.

Each model is available in a choice of two colours (with the exception of the EX and ONE), every one from the Race upwards is supplied with an Agree frame bag, and all feature Continental tyres.

But the most important characteristic that every 2027 CUBE Agree shares is a very simple one: they enable everyone to ride faster, for longer. Because together, pace and endurance are the secret to racing success.